

President Joseph R. Biden
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington DC 20500

November 21, 2022

Dear Mr. President,

We thank you for taking historic action to tackle the student debt crisis in our country and promising life-changing relief to millions of federal student loan borrowers. In just over one month, more than 26 million borrowers have applied for student loan debt relief—further evidence of the crushing burden this debt has had on workers and families from all walks of life and the promise debt cancellation will have for millions seeking an economic fresh start.

But in mid November, a Trump-appointed judge in Texas, followed by a panel of Republican appointed judges in Missouri blocked that critical debt relief. As a result, millions of borrowers—including 16 million whose applications have already been processed and approved—remain stranded in economic limbo. We applaud your Administration's commitment to fighting against these lawsuits and immediately appealing these decisions.

In fewer than 45 days, as tens of millions of student loan borrowers remain closer than ever to historic debt relief, student loan payments are set to resume for the first time in nearly three years. This threatens to set borrowers back financially as our country grapples with the lasting effects of the COVID-19 pandemic, as our economy continues to experience the highest level of inflation in nearly four decades, and as government regulators sound alarms on rising levels of borrower distress. We, the undersigned 225 organizations, urge you to immediately extend the payment pause until your Administration is able to fully implement debt relief for all eligible borrowers and to continue to use every legal authority at your disposal to make this relief real.

At the same time that student loan borrowers are facing financial catastrophe, a growing body of evidence shows that the companies contracted by the Department to assist borrowers in enrolling in the existing set of affordable repayment plans and navigating other student loan discharge options remain woefully unprepared for payments to resume.¹ It is important to remember that these borrowers have student debt because the cost of college, a critical pathway to the middle class, has spiraled out of control. They also have this debt because past administrations routinely broke their promises to deliver affordable loan payments and debt relief. These borrowers deserve more than another broken promise.

The cost of yet another broken promise to people with student debt will be immense. Just two weeks ago, a new generation of voters were mobilized and driven to the polls in part by the momentum from your promise to deliver on student debt. We urge you to use every legal tool in the government's toolbox in order to keep their faith in government and show them that, despite announced widespread paperwork processing, account access, and customer service breakdowns across their operations. See, <https://perma.cc/SM58-JANH>. Borrowers have reported that these problems are pervasive, including improper application denials, incorrect information about loan payments and account status, and call wait times as long as 9 hours. See, e.g., <https://twitter.com/StrikeDebt/status/1583295853649068032>.

the threats to it, our democracy is capable of listening to their concerns and meeting their needs.

As you explained to the American people when you announced your intent to restart student loan payments in January 2023, your Administration's monumental debt relief plan is a necessary first step to protect borrowers and prevent disastrous loan defaults and other financial distress, particularly in light of the ongoing economic challenges facing our nation as a result of the pandemic.²

We cannot allow these blatantly political lawsuits to throw millions of borrowers into financial catastrophe. Throwing millions of borrowers back into repayment as the state of debt relief remains uncertain is a recipe for disaster and will result in widespread confusion and set borrowers up for failure.

We strongly urge you to extend the pause on student loan payments and continue to use every legal authority at your disposal to fight to ensure that borrowers receive the debt relief they need. We look forward to supporting your Administration as you take this necessary action and work to deliver on the promises made to student loan borrowers across the country.

Sincerely,

²Earlier this month, the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (the Bureau) updated data showing that student loan borrowers are increasingly likely to struggle if they are forced to once again grapple with a student loan bill each month. These findings are consistent with the Student Borrower Protection Center's analysis showing that delinquencies are rising on federal student loans not covered by the payment pause.
